

Civil War and Civil Rights in Alabama's Fourth Capital

June 26-29, 2018

Alabama Natural History Museum, Tuscaloosa

Facilitators: Master Teacher Sarah Stroud, Tuscaloosa County Schools, and Amber Broadhead, Alabaster City Schools

Content Specialist: Dr. Kari Frederickson, University of Alabama

Get ready to join fellow educators on a journey about Alabama's fourth capital city, Tuscaloosa. This institute will integrate oral, local, and early Alabama history into one cohesive story. Discover how the people of Alabama and their oral history guide our present generation to understand the feelings and passion that went into social transformation. Participants will receive expert insight from Kari Frederickson, Professor of History at University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, as well as other guest historians. Come prepared for guided walks through the city of Tuscaloosa, the university campus, and local cemeteries as you learn the role that Tuscaloosa played during the Civil War and Civil Rights Era. You will also learn about primary sources, receive classroom resources, and take away strategies for engaging students in Alabama history, so your present generation of students can begin impacting the next 200 years of the city of Tuscaloosa and our state of Alabama.
